Business and Consumer Surveys March 2008

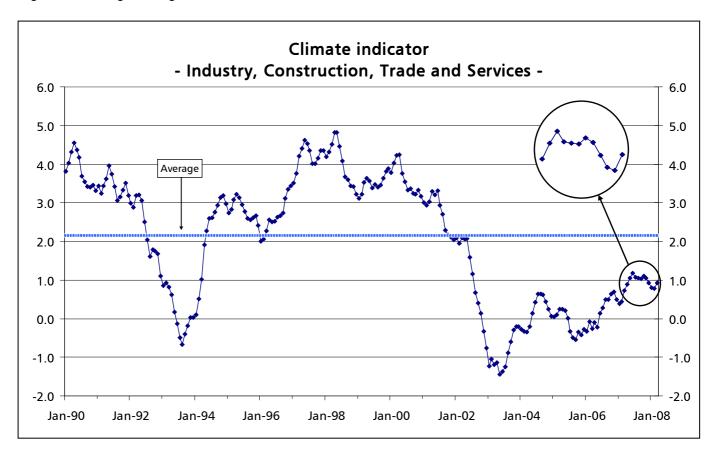

The economic climate indicator slightly recovered and the Consumer confidence indicator continued to diminish in March

The economic climate indicator slightly recovered in March, reaching the value observed in December.

The Consumer confidence indicator continued to decline in March, however less intensely than in the previous months, recording the minimum value since June 2003.

In Manufacturing Industry¹, the decline of the confidence indicator resulted from the deterioration in the opinions on global demand, interrupting the slight upward movement of the first two months of the year. In Construction and Public Works, the confidence indicator recovered in the first three months of the year, registering the highest value since October 2002. In Trade, the confidence indicator recovered in March, more than offsetting the reduction of the two previous months. The indicator's evolution was driven only by the increase observed in Wholesale. In Services, the confidence indicator slightly recovered in March, due to the demand perspectives positive evolution, discontinuing the downward movement of the previous tree months.

In March, the Consumer confidence indicator maintained the downward trend due to the negative contribution of the perspectives about the evolution of the country's economic situation and the household's financial situation, while the other components recovered. The perspectives about the country's economic situation registered the highest negative contribution for the sixth consecutive month.
